LINUX

JOHN BWALE

TODAY

1 Linux Programing Shell, navigation - Task 2

Q1: Which command should you use to display the current path of your current directory?
A1: The command you should use to display the current path of your current directory is `pwd`.

Q2: Which command should you use to change directory?
A2: The command you should use to change directory is `cd`.

Q3: Which command should you use to display the content of a file?
A3: The command you should use to display the content of a file is `less`.

Q4: Which command should you use to create an empty file?
A4: The command you should use to create an empty file is `touch`.

Q5: Which command should you use to copy a file (or directory if additional argument)?
A5: The command you should use to copy a file (or directory if additional argument) is `cp`.

Q6: Which command should you use to rename or move a file (or directory)?
A6: The command you should use to rename or move a file (or directory) is `mv`.

Q7: Which command should you use to delete a file (or directory if additional argument)?
A7: The command you should use to delete a file (or directory if additional argument) is `rm`.

Q8: Which command should you use to create a directory?
A8: The command you should use to create a directory is `mkdir`.

Q9: Which command should you use to delete a directory?
A9: The command you should use to delete a directory is `rmdir`.